In 2011, the University of Leeds launched their first Biodiversity Action Plan. As an urban campus in Leeds city centre, this plan identified many challenges and set ambitious targets. Since the launch, considerable works have already been completed on campus including the introduction of new wildflower meadows, edible planting and an annual campus bird watch. Moving forward, bird and bat box installations are planned as well as the first campus 'mass crocus plant' which will encourage staff and student participation.
